

As I work for SBC I hear a number of times a day about the number of unwanted calls coming to a home, with the current do not call list it has dropped call leaps and bounds. If a company wants to add a person to there call list they need to do as we have to do, gain there permission to be added other wise they should take it as they want to be left alone. Being a person who had there phone ring most of the time for calls i did not want the current do not call list has been a god sent, also with a new born at the time the call list went into effedt it made nap time alot easier, dinner more relaxing and over all the amount of unwanted call dwindle. A change would be a step back for the do not call list and i myself would be greatly upset over getting calls again, even if i deal with a company. Just because I deal with the company does not mean that I want them to call me about the offer for a loan or a credit card, If i want something I will call them, just like the old days....you know before the bells broke up ( which was to lower phone bills, that did not go so well now did it!!!! ) let the comsumers decide what calls to get and not to get, not the companys. The telephone is for us to use not them to sell, unless I request to be sold to other wise leave me alone altogeather
